City Water Works--River Wharves--Street Grading--Public Health--Public Docks --Extension of Main street to the River.

☞ We feel it our duty to invite the attention of the Honorable Board of Trustees, and the public generally, to the expediency of the establishment of Water Works in this city. The eminences surrounding the town in almost every direction possess living and enduring springs of beautiful clear water, and that in sufficient abundance to supply fully the entire city. Excavations could be made, and pipes laid to different sections, at the lower end of which hydrants could be erected at a comparatively trifling expense; and, according to the closest estimate we can make, will not cost to exceed $2 per rod.

All are willing to admit the inestimable blessings New York possesses by her Croton Water Works. To the present and all future ages those benefits will flow to the people of that city, and that beyond all estimation. But as great as these stupendous works are, and as beneficent as their blessings may be to the "magnificent city of fountains," they cannot in proportion be productive of more beneficial results than similar Warter Works in Milwaukie, would to the people of our city.—We have a sufficient supply of water, which, if properly conducted, would flow a fountain at almost every corner of our streets; but our object at present is to canvass (aside from the somewhat luxurious indulgence of fountains) the importance of the construction of Water Works for public utility, by conducting the water through pipes under ground, and flowing it into hydrants in the principal streets.

Aside from the supply of good pure water that these hydrants would furnish the people for general use in culinary purposes, for drink, and for cleansing the streets, it must be apparent to all that it would be most available to the public interest in case of fire on streets at a distance interior from the river. Thousands upon thousands of dollars in property might in many instances be saved from the devouring element by one of those hydrants, which could supply an engine for the most efficient action. In fact, during the disastrous fire of last April, had one of those hydrants been standing upon the corner of East Water and Michigan or Huron streets, the whole "Cottage Inn" block might have been saved, as it was only the want of a good supply of water that prevented the fire department from confining the work of destruction to the West side of the street.

We earnestly invite the attention of the Board of Trustees and the people generally to this subject, believing it to be of paramount interest, and an enterprise, which, if entered into, would be of incalculable benefit to the city; and we suggest to the people the propriety of petitioning the city government to pass an Ordinance, making the necessary appropriation for the establishment of at least four water courses through the principal streets of the town.

The absence of all public Wharves and Docks in the city is a subject upon which we venture the responsibility of a few casual remarks. In all commercial towns there should be some public place of landing, at which vessels in certain emergencies could lie, without putting the owners of private wharves to inconvenience and trouble. The proper sites for such wharves, from the fact that the city government owns no lands on the banks of the river, should be at the heads of the principal streets, terminating at the waters edge—for instance, the western terminus of Michigan, Huron and Detroit streets. At these points the streets should be graded to their proper level, and the ends docked into the river at a proper distance. These streets are eighty feet wide—good docking, including labor and materials, would cost about $2 per foot, which would be $160 for each wharf, which should be the same heighth as the street when graded. This, beside being of much public utility, would very essentially add to the beauty of the city.

In connection with this subject, we desire to suggest to the Board of Trustees the enactment of a law regulating the outward line of all private wharves. The importance of such a measure must be apparent to the most superficial observer. There should be as much regularity observed in constructing the private landing places on the river, as there is in the grading of streets, and the preservation of proper landmarks for the erection of buildings. The Corporation Surveyor should be empowered to establish proper lines for all docks and wharves, and those lines should be established with a view, not only to preserve regularity and order, but to admit all the room possible in the river, even at the expense of some extra dredging.

Our rapidly-increasing commerce will in a few years require every foot of space that can be obtained in the river, and hence the necessity of extending the line of wharves at as short a distance as possible at the time of their construction.

We rejoice to perceive that public attention is being directed to the subject of grading the streets This is right. The Corporation is certainly deserving credit for the spirit with which it has entered into this measure. The uneven surface of the ground on which the city is built, renders this improvement imperative upon the city authorities, and that too before the streets are densely built up. We think, however, that in some instances, these public improvements could have been applied to more frequented thoroughfares than some of them now in progress. The situation of a portion of Huron street claims the serious consideration of the "City Fathers." In many sections of this street, the side walks have been made to correspond with the Surveyor's grades; this raises the sides of the street four feet higher than the centre, causing the centre to resemble the bosom of a canal, in which for all the rains and water to accumulate and form a perfect slough. Not a moment should be lost in filling the centre to a grade to correspond with the sidewalks. Not only the public convenience, but the health of the city require this.

Also, in connection with this subject, we would urge upon the city government the propriety of filling Main street from Huron, south to the river.—This improvement would bring into market a large number of eligible lots on the flats, that never will be improved until Main street is completed. The expense for filling and grading this street has been estimated at $1300, a sum trifling in comparison to the innumerable benefits that would flow from the completion of this thoroughfare.

Apropos to the subject of the streets, it is gratifying to observe the commendable spirit of enter-

[illegible] Cut plank sidewalks, [illegible] Huron.

Mr. Editor:—Allow me to commence this correspondence with a trite remark; and but that you can appreciate poetry. Nothing [illegible] you but the sacred duty of vindicating the character and literary fame of a bosom and a sympathetic friend, would ne'er impel me to overcome the innate delicacy I possess of protruding on the world my humble thoughts. Sir, the indignation that for two whole days has filled my burning breast, must needs have vent; and now I pray you as your interesting paper of the twelfth contained the cause of my just wrath, let it be the channel through which the flood of mental condemnation may flow to silence now and ever the voice of coward accusation, That you may rest satisfied I am competent to judge this matter and perform this duty; I'll tell you what I am. A single word and all is told in deed, I am in truth A poet. Ah how of I've sauntered along the flowery banks of silver streamlets, and poured forth in strains euphonious and in verse, sublime the heaven-born sentiments of inspiration. The while Diana from her airy throne made radiant with her beauteous countenance the scene around and lent a sweet enchantment to the night. How oft (alas these golden hours are past) within the white washed walls of my sanctum garret up many a pair of stairs, down east in Sandytown, my soul has plumed its wings and taken flights erratic to famed Parnassus' heights, & there drank deeply from the font of purest poetry. The nymphs I've courted throughout my varied life with ardor far surpassing that of Venus for her loved Adonis; were the muses, the gentle nine, and Cleone but seldom hearken'd to my supplications. For years I've been their most devoted, while all my friends and relatives of gender masculine have woo'd and won nymphs less ethereal. And thus it is; tho' irrevocably wedded to fair poesy, as regard to real flesh and blood, behold me wifeless. Again in fond imagination I have delved the vasty depths of mighty ocean, and soared to Heavens vaulted arch, or view'd in one brief glance, the broad expanse of earth—to use the language of the immortal bard, "My eye in a fine frenzy rolling would glance from heaven to earth from earth to heaven and my imagination bodying forth hast given to airy nothings a local habitation and a name." In short to fix you forever in the belief that I am a Poet, I will quote an impromtu stanza that I made some days gone by, while prosecuting the duties of my arduous profession, within my cellar-shop, wherein in great profusion might be seen, utensils used for cleansing boots and shoes. Just having finished operating on a handsome pair, and in admiration gazing at my handiwork, I thus apostrophized:

Oh Beauteous Boots, who's shining superficies doth reflect
Most truly the lineaments of my visage soil'd
How hard to contemplate (so shortlived beauty is)
That in one little hour my fondest hopes
Thou will be cover'd o'r with mud and dirt.

Having fully established my character as a poet, I proceed to resist with uncompromising hatred the blasting suspicion of Mr. Kendall's relative, self-styled "Justice." O weep ye apparitions of departed birds, weep at this treatment of a brother. Our native poet the Homer of the West and Virgil of the North. The poet laureate of our lovely land, than whom Fair Sappho when soliciting the love of gentle Phaon, ne'er chanted in rhymes more harmonious, nor did Dante in his "Divinia Comedia," of which it has been said he doth "on horror's head horrors accumulate," give a more thrilling picture of suffering, agony, and death, than does our own divine Smith in his grand epic of the landing of the Pilgrim Fathers, on Plymouth's stern rock. In fact the splendor of his genius far outshines all those that have gone before him. Perhaps the grandeur of his theme has done the wonders Homer's subject was a ten years siege, and Virgil's the travels of a Trojan Prince beneath the glowing skies of fair Italia; the changes of the ever changing world, & Voltair; Ov d the conque t of a valiant King. I might continue my enumeration, but suffice to say not one possessed a subject so sublime as the sad and awful wreck of a canal boat. Doubtless the fates reserved it for the man, for truly it seems as if twere destined that the poet and canal boat should immortalize each other. But I'm digressing. This honor'd being, the immortal Smith has been the chosen victim of Sir "Justice" at whom to aim his poisoned shafts of deep malignity. But not satisfied with that charge, most damning to a poet's reputation, plagiarism; he deliberately robs him of his own true gems to adorn and blazon forth the scurvy name of Enim Kendall In view of such audacity, I must needs exclaim in the language of a Cicero, "Oh Trompery! O M sed!

Now Mr. Editor, to prove the falsity of the accusation, I shall found my position upon analogy; but first permit me to relate a fact. Some sixty years since, the grandfather of the poet by his mother's side and who was related to my father's mother, and which my mother oft has told me, wrote a splendid poem descriptive of his travels in the North west country on a fur hunting expedition, and which contained a pathetic history of the horrible murder of a hunter by his comrade. The manuscript is now in the possession of my wife's second brother's-sister-in law's-husband, who graciously has favored me with a copy; and I feel satisfied that the most ill natured critic (if he be but honest,) on its perusal must acknowledge, that it is an effusion dictated by the same brilliant genius which has descended to the grand son, and recently been made manifest by the beautiful lines on the canal boat wreck. On this irresistable and conclusive evidence I rest my case and hurl back with high and heartfelt scorn the foul suspicions of this well beloved second cousin of a miserable pitiable rival. But satisfy yourself—

Verse 1st

T'was just about twelve years ago
My Father he did say to me
My Son; now take your axe and hoe
And go to work, upon some other farm

2nd

Accordingly I did my Father leave
And walk'd to New York city for to find
A chance of making a gr at deal of money
Or something else that might at least be useful

3rd

In that great place I did remain a week
And soon fell in with young men light and free
Besides some others and a little boy
All going west in the service of the North American fur trading Company

4th

We forthwith went into the upper lakes
To hunt for furs and other kinds of skins
And finally came f ast of the savage french Indians
Who came very near killing us.

5th

Beyond the Rocky mountains upon a day
In June I think it was one Johnson Stubbs
Did cruelly resolve to kill his friend
Thereby to get the money he received by way of price for combs and other traps which he had furnished to the aborigines

6th

This cruel monster did a sharp axe take
And three times hit his friend upon the head
And then kept a pounding on him and a pounding on him
'Till there was no life left that you could perceive
* * * * * * *

7th

The body (which the murderer hid) was found
And he was on suspicion caught and tried
The weather then was very cold indeed
And Buffaloes and other fish were scarce

end

Where is the foul accuser of the poet now? well may he hide his diminished head. And Mr. Editor, bid my "friend to merit" rejoice with me in our successful labors, in publishing and upholding a poet's reputation, and feel gratified in the proud assurance, that ten thousand Kendalls add every Richmond in the field, all melted into one, and they would fail, aye sadly fail to make a Smith.

Very Sincerely yours,
CHATTERTON.

Odd Fellows.—The amount of money in the Treasury of the Odd Fellows in England is enormous, upward of $17,000,000; and they distribute in charity $1,500,000 annually. This fund is made up by two and three pence from each member, and the members number 900,000.

Oregon.—The ed of the Independence Expositor, writes from the camping ground May 15th, as follows:—A ride one hundred miles from Independence, has brought us into the midst of a scene the most grateful and animating my eyes ever hailed. In the centre of a beautiful prairie which the wild taste of the Kaw Indians have selected for their permanent village, is the rendezvous of the Oregon emigrants, assembled here to complete their final organization. One hundred and four wagons, arranged in an oval ring, and linked together with ox chains, form at once an immense circle to enclose the stock, and an impregnable fortress to protect them. One hundred more wagons encamped in groups at small distances, complete the troop here assembled, which dotting the plain with their snow white covers resounding with a busy multitude, plying to and fro in business of preparation; or herding the cloud of stock engaged in devouring the luxuriant grass, combine to heighten in interest, a scene full of animation, sunshine, and excitement. Simultaneously with the departure of this body of emigrants, of whom we are taking leave, other bodies have now commenced their journey from St. Joseph, Savannah, and Council Bluffs. These, of whose number we have no positive information, by report equal the emigration by the route of Independence.
